The making and meaning of home.

Home is the place where you live – but it can also be so much more. Which is why we set out to create a fully realized vision of modern urban living, where you feel the freedom to find your place, put down roots, and truly become a part of the community.

It’s a new approach to condominium living that could only come as a result of a collaboration between Canada’s top builders, developers, architects and designers – and forward-thinking homeowners like you.

East meets best.

Step into a neighbourhood of authentic charm and understated community, where some of the best shops and restaurants in the city still feel local enough to give the impression that you're discovering a hidden gem upon every visit.

Its validation as “the spot to be” doesn't come from headline hype or top 10 lists – it manifests internally, in quiet confidence; in that soft smile flashing across your face as you stroll down the sidewalk feeling right at home in a place that's your little secret. Those who live here just get it.

East End Guide

Excuse us if boasting about the East End isn't very east, but there's just too much happening to keep quiet.

A healthier way to live.

Ben Dussalt
Anchored Social Club

The eastern edge of Toronto's downtown core prides itself on its unique spaces – and that philosophy isn't limited to restaurants and nightlife. The area's design-forward aesthetic and progressive approach extends to neighbourhood fitness and social spaces, too.

Ben Dussault started Anchored Social Club in 2013, with the goal of seeing his vision of a fitness program that focuses not on external weight, but internal strength, come to life. "It's about getting people foundationally strong," he says. "As opposed to conventional resistance training, we focus on how your body is moving and how we get it to move without the assistance of external weight." It's a unique vision for fitness, and for him, this neighbourhood was the perfect place to do it.

"There are other areas of Toronto that feel like – I don't even know how to say this –like an idea of Toronto. People are still living like they need to be a certain way, but here on the east side of downtown, it feels a bit more like this is just who we are and this is how we do things. It's just more real."

Visit anchoredsocialclub.com for more on Anchored Social Club classes and schedules.

Taco night is any night.

Aldo Pescatore
La Carnita Queen East

La Carnita is Toronto’s go-to spot for authentic Mexican with a distinctly local flavour, and area residents are proud to call it one of their own. “I think what makes us most unique is our vibe,” says manager Aldo Pescatore. “It might sound cliché, but of course the food is great. It’s the vibe and general feeling that make this place so special.”

Although La Carnita boasts restaurants across Toronto, it’s their Queen Street East location that serves up perhaps the best example of this special vibe Pescatore describes. “Twenty-something hipsters can come in and have a good time, but you also see tables full of guys in suits from Bay Street sitting next to families, sitting next to tables of women having a great night out. It’s a lot of different kinds of people that come together here, and that’s special.”

Aldo and La Carnita also love the area’s sense of community, and how it fosters great connections with other local businesses. “People are really proud to be here,” he says. “We work really closely with Left Field Brewery, and their local store is their best-selling location because people here are proud it’s made just down the street. There is a great sense of community pride here, one that doesn’t exist anywhere else.”

“Also, no one can get enough of the cod tacos.”
